

Clinger Holsters Develops New, Modular, Concealed Carry OWB Holster

December 4, 2017

Van Buren, AR—Clinger Holsters has released its newest outside-the-waistband (OWB) holster, which was specifically made for concealed carry: the “V2 Ultra-Conceal OWB.” They have been impassioned with developing holsters that provide “Deep Concealment” including OWB holsters. OWB holsters are notoriously difficult to conceal, however Clinger Holsters’ “V2 Ultra-Conceal OWB,” is changing that.

Their patented “Cling Tab” system pulls the grip in tight when you fasten your belt. The “V2 Ultra-Conceal OWB” has two belt bet clips that attach the holster to the belt. These clips can be adjusted to modify cant, ride height, and retention.

Clinger Holsters’ concealment solution lies in the two tabs on either side of the holster, which the clips are attached to. Their tabs are not just kydex, like other manufacturers—Clinger Holsters’ stiff, kydex “Cling Tab” is combined with a leather “Flex Tab.” The “Cling Tab” pulls the grip of the pistol close and the “Flex Tab” allows the holster to wrap and flex around the body.

For further concealment, all their holsters have a small foot print. This means that the holster is as small and streamlined as possible; smaller kydex holsters are concealed easier than other IWB or OWB holsters. The smaller footprint of Clinger Holsters does not trap as much sweat as other holsters. Their models have full sweat shields, as well. All their holsters use the best hardware to resist sweat, including: black oxide steel hardware. The “V2 Ultra-Conceal OWB” holster has all these features, covered magazine release and has a large sight channel.

But one of the greatest things about Clinger Holsters’ OWB is that it can be converted to a usable, and more importantly, concealable inside-the-waistband (IWB) holster, which is their flagship model, the “No Print Wonder.” For further modulation, the “No Print Wonder” can be converted into their “Stingray” model.

Their “V2 Ultra-Conceal OWB” holster sells for $69.99 and comes with a Lifetime Warranty. Clinger Holsters supports hundreds of gun models and their website has a new Search by Gun feature to make finding your favorite gun model simple; listed first by manufacturer, then gun model.
